THREAT OF FAMINE FOLLOWS BIG FIRE AT NOME, ALASKA

Virtually Every Building Of Consequence Destroyed;
Loss Over Two Million

FOOD GREATLY NEEDED

2 Eskimos Known To Have Burned To Death; Set Up
Emergency Hospital

By Russell Maynard
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

NOME, Alaska, Sept. 18.—(INS)—The grim threat of famine hung over the 1500 residents of this once famous mining city of the far North, today, following a disastrous fire which destroyed virtually every building and dwelling place of consequence and caused property damage estimated at upwards of $2,000,000.

With the severe Arctic winter of eight months duration rapidly approaching, and most of the food supply destroyed in the fire, residents frantically sought the aid of the federal government.

It was plainly evident that unless a plentiful supply of food is rushed here immediately and some form of shelter provided for those made homeless in the fire before the winter cold depends upon the city a heavy loss of life would result.

At least two persons, both Eskimos, are known to have been burned to death and innumerable others injured in the fire, which was still raging at an early hour today.

The injured are being cared for in an emergency hospital hurriedly set up just beyond the reach of the flames, while relief kitchens and shelters for the homeless have been established in warehouses on the outskirts of the city.

The fire is thought to have originated in the Golden Gate Hotel possibly from a flying spark and after spreading rapidly through the rooms of the hotel communicated itself to adjacent buildings.

In a short time all of the government buildings, including the post office, the courthouse, the jail and road commission headquarters were ablaze.

Within an hour the blaze had spread to Front street, where almost all of the business buildings were located. They were quickly demolished.

No restaurants were left standing. The newspaper, The Nome Daily Nugget, embracing two plants, was totally destroyed.

Airplane ticket offices and banks, saloons, pool rooms, garages, jewelry stores, drug stores, a municipal steam heating plant and huge quantities of fuel oil all were destroyed.

Grocery stores were among the first to go up in flames and very little food was saved.

Shortly after the fire broke out the fire department building was destroyed, cutting off the water supply. The firemen then began dynamiting buildings in a futile effort to halt the flames.

The only buildings left undamaged today were the United States radio station, the Lomen Commercial Hotel, and a few homes in the northern section of the town.

The only immediate possibility of aid from the outside appeared to be the liner Victoria which left Seattle on Saturday for Nome.

Yom Kippur Will Begin At Sunset This Evening

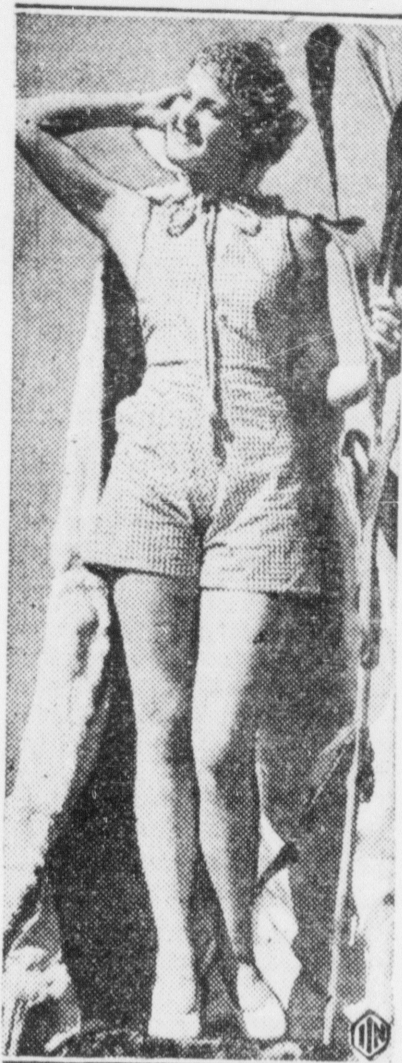

The Day of Atonement or "Yom Kippur," the tenth day of the month of Tishri, begins at sunset today, and ends at sunset tomorrow. The thought underlying the day is expressed in the scriptural words "On this day He will atone for you, to purify you from your sins." It is a day of reconciliation of man with his fellow-man and with God, and comes as a climax to the holiday season which began Sunday evening, September 9, with the New Year's day and continued through the ten days of penitence.

The Day is the most solemn of all the days in the Jewish calendar. It is passed in fasting and prayer. The whole day is spent in the synagogue. In the evening there is the service which commences with the chanting of the well-known Kol Nidre prayer. The day proper has four services. Of these the Mussaf or afternoon service contains a description of the atonement rites as practiced in ancient days in the Temple at Jerusalem; and the closing service is understood to be held at the time when traditionally decision is finally made as to man's fate, and thus these prayers instead of having the usual phrase, "Inscribe us in the book of life," use the expression: "Seal us in the book of life."

FIRE CO. SUPPER

LANGHORNE, Sept. 18.—Langhorne Fire Company's annual chicken supper is scheduled for Thursday evening, September 20th, with a menu that is most tempting. The supper will be served between the hours of five and eight o'clock, and a fine orchestra will provide music for dancing.

Fairest of the Fair

Ann Harriet Pettus
Here is really the fairest of the fair. That is to say, pretty Ann Harriet Pettus, above, 18-year-old farmerette, is the agricultural queen of the Los Angeles county fair, Pomona, Cal. Her modernistic farm attire contrasts with her crown and regal robe.

MORRISVILLE POST OFFICE TO BE MOVED NEXT MONTH

Will Occupy Space in Joseph
T. O'Neill Property On East Bridge Street

OTHER NEWS NOTES

MORRISVILLE, Sept. 18.—Morrisville's post office will be moved to new quarters within the next two months, it was announced today by Postmaster George W. Burner. The Post Office Department has cancelled its lease for office space in the Stockham building, which expires the end of September, and will take a new lease on the East Bridge street property owned by Joseph T. O'Neill, a former resident of this place.

Renovation of the O'Neill residence will begin within the next few days, where a complete remodeling will be undertaken to fit the structure for occupancy by the local post office.

The renovation plans call for the addition of a new section to bring the building front out to the sidewalk. This addition will be made to the first floor where a modern building front and lobby will be constructed.

Colored Voters' Big Rally Meets With Success

LANGHORNE, Sept. 18.—The rally and picnic of the Colored Republican League of Bucks County which was held here Saturday was one of the most successful ever staged by the county organization.

There was speech making by the various candidates, a baseball game and lunch was served.

The social spirit dominated the meeting and a delightful afternoon was had by those in attendance.

Among the speakers were: the Honorable Theodore R. Gardner, Allentown, candidate for Congress; Honorable Clarence J. Buckman, Langhorne, candidate for state senator; Honorable Wilson L. Yeakel, Perkasie, candidate for assembly; Honorable Thomas B. Stockham, Morrisville, candidate for assembly. Hon. William S. Hagans, Philadelphia; Hon. Samuel D. Hart, Philadelphia; Eli Barrett, Langhorne; and Louis Willhite, Bristol.

Mrs. Hannah Flum Thackery Dies at Bensalem Home

HULMEVILLE, Sept. 18.—Following a short illness, Mrs. Hannah Flum Thackery, wife of the late George Thackery, died at her home in Bensalem Township, yesterday afternoon. Although blind for many years Mrs. Thackery was a most patient sufferer, and always had a cheery word of greeting for friends who enjoyed visits at her home.

Three brothers survive: Fred Flum, Bensalem Township, with whom the deceased made her home; Daniel Flum, Hulmeville; and Frank Flum, Bristol.

The late Mrs. Thackery was one of the oldest members of Bensalem M. E. Church.

The Rev. Howard W. Adams, pastor of Bensalem M. E. Church, will officiate at the funeral service in that edifice Thursday at two p. m., and burial will be made in the Bensalem Methodist Graveyard. Friends may call Wednesday evening at the funeral home of Charles Haefner, here.

"THE VALLEY OF THE DELAWARE" IS TITLE OF A BOOK WRITTEN BY JOHN PALMER GARBER, A FORMER SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT OF PHILA.

Tells of Influences That, Flowing
From This Region,
Have Molded History

15,000 SQUARE MILES

Lenapes Had Established
Headquarters Before Columbus Discovered Country

Under the heading "Men and Things," the following appeared in the Philadelphia Bulletin on Friday:

Much has been written by historians of the influence on the national life of the Puritan, the Cavalier, or the hardy strain of pioneers who carried American civilization westward from the coast. In his book "The Valley of the Delaware," John Palmer Garber, Philadelphia's former Superintendent of Schools and president of the City History Society, has told of the influences that, flowing from this region have moulded or changed the course of American history and have affected the life, habits and customs of our people.

Within this territory, embracing 15,000 square miles, now reside five million persons, as many as the entire population of ten Western States. But extensive as their influence is today it is with the past rather than the present with which Dr. Garber prefers to deal.

To the tribe of the Lenni Lenape, who dwell in this region before the coming of the white man, the river was known as the "Lenape Whittuck," or river of the Lenapes. At the "strong falls" of the river, where Trenton is today, these tribesmen had established their headquarters long before Columbus discovered America. It was a pleasant and picturesque region, filled with fertile valleys and with streams that made easy access possible to all sections as well as to the sea and it early attracted the attention of the Dutch, Swedes and English.

The Dutch and the Swedes, used to living in simple structures on the lowlands, accustomed to building dikes and ditches, Dr. Garber notes, settled on the lowlands. When the English and the Germans came they sought higher land, freer from mosquitoes and malaria, and began to spread the settlements away from the river. Then came strong individualists from Scotland and Ireland, the so-called Scotch-Irish, who pioneered farther. Religious persecution in Europe sent the Moravians, the Dunkards, Schwenkfelders, Hugenots and other exiles to these shores. From the land of Evangeline came the Acadians. Still later were to come refugees from Santo Domingo; then others from war and famine and political oppression in Europe.

When Penn arrived here, he says, he found about 3,500 inhabitants between Lewes and Trenton. Within two years that number had doubled. In 1683 the founder, writing home, observed 60 ship loads of immigrants had arrived in the Delaware since the preceding summer. There were years in the early part of the eighteenth century when they came here

PA. TROOPERS ON GUARD AT PERKASIE SILK MILLS

Nearly 200 Workers Are Terrorized As The Mill
Is Entered

LOOMS SHUT DOWN

By International News Service

PERKASIE, Sept. 18.—State troopers and sheriff's deputies today guarded the Perkasie Silk Mills here, following a night of disorders, during which a "flying squadron" of textile strikers charged the plant, terrorizing 175 workers and halting operations by shutting down the looms.

The Perkasie disturbances followed by several hours, disorders at the R. L. Kaler mill at Hatfield when pickets besieged the mill and forced it to close.

State Police were sent here last night from Gratersford, after the first outbreak. No further trouble developed, however.

Cloak, 2041; Mrs. Middleton, 1911; Margaret McGee, 1569; Miss E. Kelly, 1441.

Funeral of M. Marozzi Very Largely Attended

A largely attended funeral marked the last rites for Michael Marozzi, 23, son of Mr. and Mrs. Pietro Marozzi, 346 Lincoln avenue, who was suddenly killed Friday when struck by a circular saw.

Many relatives and friends attended the ceremonies this morning and flowers were numerous.

High mass was said at St. Ann's Church, and interment occurred in St. Mark's Cemetery. Pall-bearers were: Messrs. Arthur Gilardi, James Tulio, Joseph Tulio, Albert Mancini, Alfred Caucei, Nicholas Rago.

Amigos Club to Meet At White Home in Cornwells

The Amigos Club of the Eddington Presbyterian Church will hold its Fall meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. White, Cornwells Heights, September 27th, at 8 p. m. sharp. All members and friends of the association are requested to attend.

At the closing meeting of the club for the summer, the officers for the fall were elected: President, Miss Helen Keaton; first vice-president, Miss Dorothy Abel; second vice-president, Miss Helen Cassile; secretary, Miss Frances Simons; treasurer, Miss Dorothy Waters.

The club will now be under the spiritual guidance of the new minister-elect, Rev. Arthur D. Sargis, and a very promising year is ahead.

Planning for Flower Show At Langhorne on Thursday

LANGHORNE, Sept. 18.—Great plans are being made by the Garden Section of Langhorne Sorosis for the sixth annual Fall flower show, which will take place at the Garden Center on Thursday next. Members of the Section announce that the show will be open to all, and the public is invited to enter blooms. Entries are to be sent to the Center by 12 o'clock noon, and the show will commence at three o'clock and continue throughout the evening.

Prizes this year will be unusual hilly bulbs. These prizes were decided upon by the committee in charge, as it is desired to make Langhorne borough "hilly conscious."

Judges will be three members of Bristol Travel Club, namely Miss Finnie Williams, Mrs. Earl H. Tomb and Mrs. Walter Pitzenka.

The garden committee from the Sorosis in charge of the show is composed of: Mrs. Henry C. Parry, Mrs. Harry Williams, Mrs. Harriet Tomb, Mrs. Edward Paret, Mrs. J. V. Hare, Mrs. Harriet Mitchell.

Season's Final Play Given By King's Theatre Guild

ANDALUSIA, Sept. 18.—On Friday evening the players of the King's Theatre Guild presented their final play of the season, entitled, "Clarence," by Booth Tarkington. This comedy-farce was highly delightful and was a big success.

The first act took place in the anteroom to Mr. Wheeler's private office in New York City. Mrs. Martyn, who was portrayed by Dorothea Wenner, Torresdale Manor, was Mr. Wheeler's confidential secretary. Mr. Wheeler, who was Paul Otis, Roxborough, was the father of this unusual family. Mrs. Wheeler, played by Mrs. Virginia Murray, Torresdale, was the stepmother of Bobby Wheeler (Harry Selzer, of Eddington), and Cora Wheeler (Mildred Stevenson, of Torresdale Manor). Miss Violet Pinney, the governess of Cora, was played by Axel Kleinsorg. The maid, Della, was Miss Alice Murray, Torresdale; Dinwiddie, the butler, John Wilkins; and Hubert Stem, William Lange. The love affairs in the household were interesting. Mr. Wheeler had a fondness for Miss Pinney. The son, Bobby, first liked Della the maid, and finally was a willing slave of Violet Pinney, and when Clarence came along, finally won Violet for his own. Cora, who was violently in love with Hubert Stem, also fell in love with Clarence, who at first was a poor, wounded soldier with liver trouble. He finally turned out to be Dr. Clarence Smith, D. S.

The second, third and fourth acts were set in the elaborate living room of Mr. Wheeler's home in New York City.

During the intermission the orchestra, under the direction of Lewis Hartman, entertained. A brass quartette consisting of William Lange, Ethel Hartman, George Knoll and Kimbel Faust was enjoyed also.

Mrs. Virginia Leversedge gave a little talk about the play and players. She explained that during the Winter no plays will be given, but in the Spring they will be resumed.

The coach was John Lamping, Downingtown.

RELIEF MEASURE ROLLS ON

Harrisburg, Sept. 18.—Transferred to the Senate, the Pinchot administration taxless relief measures rolled along toward enactment in that chamber today as swiftly as they were given endorsement in the lower branch of the assembly at the special session.

Slightly more than one hour after convening, the Senate sped the nine bills, transferring $15,061,000 from seven state funds and appropriating the money for relief, old age assistance and expenses of the session to the second reading calendar, then adjourning until 11 a. m. today when the measures were to be advanced to the final passage docket.

Wednesday sessions have been decided upon by both houses in an effort to adjourn Sine Die.

The Senate, unless plans are changed, will meet in the morning to approve finally all relief bills, then adjourn until evening.

RUMORS CONFLICT

Labor and management collided head-on with conflicting rumors in the cotton textile strike today as opposing leaders in the industrial conflict tabulated reports from mill areas where resumption on a fairly broad scale has been attempted by plant operators.

Simultaneously, manufacturers were given cause for jubilation by the precedent set decision, by counsel for the petroleum labor board, that employees found guilty of violation in an Oklahoma oil strike are barred from reinstatement.

An optimistic declaration that more than 12,000 employees in four southern states have returned to their looms came from George A. Sloan, president of the Cotton Textile Institute. Sloan's estimate was countered by Francis J. Gorman, strike chairman, who declared: "the strike is bigger than it was on Saturday."

At Washington a council of war was convened by the executive committee of the textile union to determine whether 100,000 workers in industries allied with cotton textile production should be ordered from their jobs.

Card Party of Auxiliary Headed by Mrs. Conklin

Heading the committee in charge of the monthly card party held last evening in the Robert Bracken Post home was Mrs. Samuel Conklin. The affair was sponsored by the American Legion Auxiliary.

Ten tables of pinochle players and numerous contestants in the game of bingo comprised the attractions. A beautiful selection of prizes was on display for the selection of contestants.

Highest scorers in pinochle were: Mrs. Anna Gosline, 817; Mrs. William E. DeGroot, Jr., 755; Mrs. R. Ruby, 751; Mrs. Robinson, 751; Miss Dorothy Shultz, 741.

Bingo highest contestants were: Mrs. B. Detmer and Mrs. Marvel Durham.

EDGELY FOLKS DISCUSS COMMUNITY BUILDING

Sixty Residents of the Community Consider New Project at Meeting

TO ASK LWD FOR HELP

EDGELY, Sept. 18.—The open meeting held in the fire house last night was attended by 60 men and women of the community. The chair was occupied by President John Schotten and the discussion was the building of a new fire and community house, the building to be built on the ground now owned by the fire company at Edgely avenue and Haines Road.

The committee appointed at the previous meeting to submit plans and approximate cost of erecting such a building consisted of Joseph Mintzer, Samuel Hellings and Thomas Brown.

Plans of buildings numbered three, were discussed and found that plan No. 2 was the one which afforded greater use for both purposes, the fire apparatus room to be on the lower floor, below street level and the upper floor to be used for all social affairs, having a stage and floor space for either sports or other activities of the community, these plans subject to change.

Russell Stackhouse, supervisor of Bristol township, had been consulted as to the plans and it was suggested that the building of the new hall be taken up by the township through the L. W. D. These plans were turned over to Mr. Stackhouse and the same committee to consult legal authority and report further at next meeting. This matter also was to be held subject to change.

Hero of the Bryn Athyn Train Wreck of 1921, Dies

NEWTOWN, Sept. 18.—The hero of the Bryn Athyn train wreck of 1921, James H. Rook, is dead.

"Jimmy" as he was known to one and all, died at the Jeanes Hospital, Sunday, at the age of 62 years. He had been ill, and suffered much since the terrific crash of the engine which he piloted and No. 151 at Bryn Athyn 13 years ago, but to none did he complain.

"Jimmy," whose heroic work on that fateful Winter night, was known to many, had orders to pass No. 151 at Bryn Athyn, 151 to remain on the siding.

He often recalled that he had one of those premonitions. "I had a feeling that 151 was coming," he'd say. He stood there with his hand on the brake valve, and presently that premonition became a crashing, splintering reality. Twenty-five were killed and many more were injured.

Jimmy was burned, scalded, crushed. His crumpled body was tossed into a snow bank, and from there he called out instructions for saving some of the passengers.

When the Abington Hospital ambulance arrived, something was wrong with the motor. Doctors held "Jimmy" in their arms and he found the trouble.

On the run to the hospital the ambulance stopped again. The air intake covering was loose. Jimmy lay on the running board and held his hand over the opening. Doctors were busy with the others inside.

They fixed "Jimmy" up, but in 1932 it took six more months in Abington Hospital. He'd been in the hospital in between, too.

When he was home he spent his days feeding the chickens. He never complained.

PAYS $200 FINE FOR SELLING BEVERAGE AT ANDALUSIA

Joseph Stryginski, Frankford,
Is Fined On Two Charges
At Court

FREEMAN SAYS GUILTY

Sentence Deferred in Case of Ralph Freeman, Bristol,
By Court

DOYLESTOWN, Sept. 18.—At the opening of the second week of criminal court, Joseph Stryginski, a Frankford grocer, pleaded guilty to a charge of selling beverage and liquor without a license at St. Valentine's Park, Andalusia, on the occasion of a picnic staged on Sunday, June 10, by the Polish-American League of Philadelphia.

The park is owned by St. Valentine's Catholic Church and the priest of the parish testified in court before President Judge Hiram H. Keller that he had advised his people to sell the picnic grounds and park that are rented out to various organizations.

The priest also testified that about a year ago he made a visit to four or five other picnic grounds in Bucks county, and there saw that conditions were even more hilarious than at St. Valentine's Park.

County Detective Antonio Russo testified that he had warned the park committee several times about not selling beer on Sunday and that they could not charge admission to the grounds.

"In spite of that fact, the picnics continued and beer was sold on Sundays," Detective Russo testified. "The system they use is to charge admission to the park and sell tickets that are good for either a glass of beer, a soft drink or a sandwich. The profits made from the rent of the picnic grounds is donated to St. Valentine's Church, it is alleged.

Detective Russo testified that an agent of the State Liquor Control Board visited the park on June 10 and made a "buy." He first bought some beer and then asked for some liquor. Russo said that Stryginski went across the street from the park and brought back a pint of whiskey—"Old Allegheny"—which was sold to the agent by the defendant for $2.

Stryginski, on the witness stand, denied that he had ever been in the bootleg business. He said that he once operated a hotel in Frankford, but that he recently sold it. He told Judge Keller that his committee operated the picnic grounds in a manner that they thought was "according to law." He said that they were later informed not to sell beer or to charge admission to the grounds and that they had acted upon that advice which came from their attorney.

Judge Keller said that because of the small quantity of liquor sold in this case, prison sentence would be suspended on the liquor charge upon payment of costs and the sum of $100 to Bucks county. On the charge of selling beer without a license a fine of $100 and costs was imposed.

Henry Johnson, sixty, of Morrisville, pleaded guilty before Judge Keller to a charge of burglary, felonious entry, larceny and receiving stolen goods. He was sentenced to serve from nine to eighteen months in the Bucks County Prison, and to pay the costs.

Abraham Lynch, Morrisville, insurance agent, testified that he saw Johnson leaving his house through a downstairs window, and that he followed him and cornered him behind another house, where he "plugged him over the head with a blackjack until police were summoned."

Johnson said that he did not remember a thing about the affair, that he was drunk at the time. He said he did not even remember being hit on the head.

Charged with operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of intoxicating liquor Maurice D. Simpson, a Negro, went on trial before Judge Calvin S. Boyer.

Patrolmen G. F. Carfagno, of the State Highway Patrol, who investigated the accident, testified the defendant's car figured in a crash on the Hulmeville road on August 26.

Dr. Henry Lovett, of Langhorne, who examined the defendant, stated that in his opinion Simpson was drunk.

Members of the jury included D. Horace Diehl, Pipersville; Lynn Harrington, Langhorne; Mathias Weinbelt, Ottsville; Mary W. Krupp, Chalfont; Edward Roth, Point Pleasant; William M. Seidel, Perkasie; R. D. 3; Harry Donat, Spinnerstown; Thomas J. Burns, Bristol; Mary E. Frey, Springfield; William Gillis, Bristol; R. Maurice Woolman, Newtown; William R. Yardley, Jr., Yardley, R. D. 3.

Ralph Freeman, of Bristol, charged, larceny and receiving stolen goods, pleaded guilty; sentence deferred.

CHEMICAL GARDENING

Kitchen-grown vegetables are seen as a not far-off possibility in connection with a German discovery now being utilized on a commercial scale.

Through a special process developed by Dr. Paul Spangenberg, crops of maize and barley are grown in 10 days and without the use of soil. Instead of being planted in the ground, the seed are placed in trays arranged in tiers inside of a large metal cabinet. A chemical solution then is fed to the seed which germinate and in 10 days produce a crop ready to be harvested.

The discovery is in practical use on the farm of Michal Faraday, grandson of the great electrician, in England. Each of the cabinets in which the seed are placed has 10 sections, while each section contains eight trays. As each day's crop is harvested, more seed are planted, so that the farmer has fresh pasturage every day in the year for his cattle.

The process has been patented and a company organized to market the cabinets. Orders are reported to be coming from all parts of England, and early introduction of the process in the United States is being planned. Had it been in operation here at the outset of the drought, cattle raisers might not have been forced to sacrifice their herds.

The next step contemplated by the German scientist is application of the same principle to the growing of vegetables. This still is in the experimental stage. The ultimate aim is to produce smaller cabinets which can be kept in the home and be made to supply fresh vegetables all the year round.

Such a possibility may seem fanciful. Yet, if fodder crops can be thus grown the production of vegetables in a similar way may become a reality.

WANTED—LEADERSHIP

In these days of confusing developments of one kind or another the outstanding need seems to be leadership.

Not the kind of leadership that is based on mere optimism without experience, but the sort that involves courage, good judgment, inherent ability, character, and—if need be—the will to sacrifice for the public good.

These are the days which invite community service of the highest order and men and women qualified for leadership are in constant demand.

There are always those who assume the post of command without qualifications to justify their assumption of leadership, but these soon disclose their lack of ability and essential good sense necessary to safe guidance.

CAROLINE by RUTH DEWEY GROVES

CHAPTER XXXV

"Will you go for a drive with me, sweetheart? I'm on a vacation, and it's a nice day. Be good for you to get out. We'll lunch in the country. And then I'll tell you my good news."

"Oh no, tell me now."

"Get your hat and coat. I'll tell you in the car."

Caroline delayed to give some instructions to Mrs. Stevenson but in a few minutes she was ready. Howard was glad to leave the house. In spite of all that Caroline and her mother had done to brighten it up he found it depressing. He would give a great deal, he thought, if Caroline were never coming back to it. With the thought came a glow of righteousness, which he did not analyze; and therefore did not discover that it was his own love of comfort that inspired his generosity.

"We're going to look at a little old stone cottage at Lake Cloud," he said to her as they drove away. "And if you like it, Caro, we'll buy it in the spring. It's for sale very cheap. Everything is coming our way at last, sweetheart. Gwen's off for Reno and she isn't going to cause us any trouble. I've had a talk with Dad . . ."

"Oh, Howard," Caroline broke in, "you mean he isn't going to oppose our marriage?"

The pause that preceded Howard's answer to Caroline's question was more enlightening than his words. "He isn't as down on me about Gwen's leaving as I thought he'd be," he said. "But of course," he added hastily, "he doesn't know all about it."

Caroline drew in a sharp breath. "All about what?" she asked. "Gwen or me?"

"About you, dear. I couldn't tell him. He believed, as it was, that I was to blame for all the trouble with Gwen—if he'd known about you I could never have convinced him that I wasn't."

"Well," Caroline asked, "aren't you, Howard? Aren't both of us to blame?"

"You know better than that," Howard answered shortly.

"It's true, I haven't felt guilty about it," Caroline admitted, "but Gwen wouldn't have left you if it hadn't been for me, would she?"

"I think she would," Howard said. "She told me she's in love with someone else, Caro."

"Oh!—well, I'm glad. I'll stop worrying about her now. I was a little, you know, thinking that perhaps we hadn't so much right to our love as we believed. I've hated her, Howard, but I felt, after last night, that I might have been wrong."

"You were wasting your sympathy," Howard told her. "Gwen didn't go for our sakes. She wants to be free to marry again."

"That makes things better for you with your father, doesn't it?"

"It saved the day for me. After Gwen got so hot about you she'd have done anything to injure us if she hadn't had good reason not to. She's trying to keep her dad sweet, too."

Caroline looked at him, with a twist of doubt on her lips. "Too?" she repeated. "Do you mean, Howard, that now you are to be free, you must consider your father above all else?"

"Not above all else, darling," Howard corrected. "But with all else. Surely you understand that. I'm just where I was before, as far as he's concerned, except that Gwen has made the break and Dad hasn't kicked me out. I thought you'd be pleased that things have gone so well."

"I am, dear," Caroline said, feeling ashamed of her nagging. "I know you're right—if we're to be sensible about it. But . . . well, never mind, tell me one thing. You don't think we've driven Gwendolyn into anything she'll regret, do you?"

"What makes you so suddenly tender toward her?" Howard retorted. "I assure you she doesn't feel the same toward you."

"I don't know," Caroline replied, "unless it's just that sorrow softens our hearts. I know, really, that I haven't anything to thank her for, and yet I shouldn't want to be responsible for any trouble that comes to her."

"You won't be; I wish you could take care of herself. But I wish you'd be as considerate of me. You can save me a great deal of trouble and unhappiness just by standing with me against Dad."

Caroline sighed. "I'll try," she said, but there was no warmth in her voice. Deep in her heart she was still disappointed that Howard was still willing to defy his father for her sake.

"Tell me about the cottage at the lake," she said, forcing herself to sound enthusiastic.

"I think you'll like it," Howard responded. "It's old and tumble-down in places, but we can have a lot of fun remodeling it."

"How did you find it? Lake Cloud is so inaccessible."

"On a hunting trip," he laughed. "I do go hunting once in a while."

"But won't it be awfully out of the way for us—for you?"

"Yes, it will," he acknowledged, "but Caro, honey, it won't be long before we can be married. Not long enough, I'm afraid, to make Dad see things our way. Just in case he doesn't . . . I thought . . . well, why should we wait? We can be married anyway—and it's lovely in the summer at Lake Cloud. In the winter, if you get lonely, we could come back to town and take a small apartment for a few months. And in time everything is bound to come right."

"A secret marriage," Caroline said slowly. "It's a great risk," she added with a hint of sarcasm.

Howard did not catch it. "I know," he replied, "but I've got to take it. I won't wait any longer than I have to for you, sweetheart."

Caroline closed her eyes and remained silent, trying to hide from him the coolness she felt toward his proposal. It frightened her to feel as she did. What if her mother had been right, and the piecemeal revelation of Howard's character should show her traits in it that she could not tolerate?

"Don't be a fool . . . don't go looking for pots of gold," she told herself fiercely. "What's wrong with a secret marriage?" Howard was right to expect her to consider his interests. Why shouldn't he have both her and his father's money?

Wasn't she thinking too much of her own ideals? Wouldn't any girl who loved him want to help him?

Suddenly she put a hand on his arm. "I'm a terrible fraud," she said candidly. "Always thinking of myself, and pretending it's high-mindedness. Forgive me, darling, and drive faster. It's a long way to Lake Cloud."

"I knew you'd come through for me!" Howard exclaimed happily. "You're the one person I can count on, Caro. But what do I have to forgive?"

Caroline was surprised that he shouldn't know, but she said only: "For not appreciating your cleverness in finding a way to outwit your father. It is a feather in your cap."

"Romantic, too," Howard supplied, and for the first time in her life Caroline felt that she had been stung. But the old, stubborn loyalty of her first love for him came to prick at her conscience. She felt ashamed. Where—if he were to go on baiting him, criticizing him—would it end?

Tears of repentance sprang into her eyes. His kindness deserved something better than this. How had she got into such a state of mind about him? She loved him, wanted nothing more than to be his wife, and yet every move he made to bring about the consummation of their happiness seemed to meet with her disapproval. It wasn't fair to him! She had said she drove him away from her in the first place. Why couldn't she remember that? And that she'd cried her heart out to have him back on any terms? Why couldn't she see that Howard's fortune was her fortune? Why couldn't she want security and ease more than a silly exhibition of independence? Certainly Howard would never be content in poverty—why expect him to be miserable just so that she might feel she had inspired a story book love?

She leaned against him, yielding. Howard put an arm around her long enough to draw her closer. He became expansive with satisfaction. "We'll have a honeymoon trip before we settle down at the lake," he said happily. "I'll get at least two weeks away from the factory—unless Dad has sold it—then of course I'll have as much time as we like."

"Is he thinking of selling it?" Caroline asked.

"Yes. Purell is after it; wants the Rutledge face mask." He smiled down at her. "You're not more interested in the factory than your honeymoon, are you?" he teased.

Caroline laughed. "The factory's there," she said, "and the honeymoon is yet to come. I can't help having a proprietary feeling about the place, you know. As a matter of fact, I've stored up a lot of ideas about things I'd like to do there when you own it."

"And I've a lot of ideas about things for you to do in other places," he rejoined.

Thinking of the Rutledge factory had turned Caroline's mind to her father. "I suppose I should do my crusading at home," she remarked. "Father needs me, Howard."

"Caroline," he began, and there was an impatient note in his voice. "No," she stopped him, guessing what he was about to say. "I don't mean to ask you to marry my father, too. But . . . oh why try to deny what's true! He will end in the gutter if someone doesn't stop him! I can't let him do that!"

"Yes," Howard said thoughtfully, "he will." And it came to him as a shock that the man he frequently heard spoken of with pity or contempt by his old acquaintances would soon be related to him. Hardly a father-in-law to be proud of!

"You're right," he added hastily, "we've got to help him. I'll think of something. Of course, we'll need all the money I have for the cottage and . . ."

"And that reminds me," Caroline broke in. "I'm letting Mrs. Stevenson go. It's been a great help to have her, but I don't need her any longer. Mrs. Wade will come in again and relieve me of the heavy work."

"Mrs. Wade and the neighbors," Howard remarked. "And that's just what I think we can't afford, dear. Gossip—you know how it spreads. It might reach Dad's ears."

"Not the gossip of South Town," Caroline smiled.

"Besides that," Howard continued, "I want to know that there's someone in the house to look after you. Imagine how I'd feel with just your father there. Please tell Mrs. Stevenson she's to stay."

"You're awfully sweet about it," Caroline said, and smiled. She was thinking of what Mrs. Stevenson would say when that genteel personage learned she was keeping house for a factory worker.

Howard glanced at the clock in the instrument panel. "Time for lunch," he said cheerfully. "The Lady Slipper is just ahead; shall we stop there?"

RAINBOW BOWS TO ENDEAVOUR IN SEA RACE

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 18.—In one of the swiftest and most dramatic yacht races ever waged for the famous America's Cup, the big blue challenger from England, T. O. M. Sopwith's Endeavour, overcame a succession of sail-hoisting difficulties yesterday and gave an unexpectedly sound beating to the defending sloop, Harold S. Vanderbilt's Rainbow.

Endeavour demonstrated conclusively that she is a speedier heavy weather craft, completely reversed her sorry showing in Saturday's drifting match that wound up "no contest," and yesterday was one up in the first conclusive test of the 1934 series. The British Lion was roaring full-throated defiance to American sea supremacy for the first time since 1920.

After chasing the Rainbow over the outgoing half of the 39-mile windward-leeward course through heavy seas and rain squalls, Endeavour overtook the defender at the outset of the run home, with a fairly startling burst of speed under the impetus of a unique ventilated or "Annie Oakley" spinnaker. For the first time since the start, Sopwith looked Vanderbilt squarely in the eye, then forged quickly into the lead and left the defending sloop struggling a desperate but decisively beaten boat over the closing 15 miles.

BRISTOL DOG WINS IN MCKEAN COUNTY EVENT

"Long Island Boy," the champion year-old pointer, owned by Elwood G. Munster, won the coveted Derby stakes yesterday at the McKean County field trials at Bradford, against the class of the east in hunting dogs.

Mr. Munster's liver and white colored wonder has defeated every pointer that has contested against him, so far, his handling by George M. Crangle, famous professional trainer, of Vernon, N. Y., has developed the youngster to a surprising degree of smartness while working in the field and has been the talk of the trials.

Despite an injury received by the Munster dog last Saturday while training when he was bitten on the hind leg by another dog, making him lame, he came around in real championship form to beat the field in the big money stakes.

ROHM & HAAS BOWLERS WIN ALL FOUR POINTS

Rohm & Haas won all four points from Paterson Parchment Paper Co. Andy Pfaffenrath was high man for the evening with 580 total.

Hirsch had 232 for high single. Gaddish of the paper mill was best man on that team with 519.

ST. ANN'S BOCCE TEAM DEFEATS ROYAL ITALIANS

After dropping two straight bocce games in as many weeks, the St. Ann's A. A. came through in startling style and defeated "Butch" Cattani's Royal Italians before a large crowd of spectators on the St. Ann's court last night.

The match was divided into five sets with a running of twelve points, two men from each side representing a turn.

The visitors chalked up the opening set in their favor by a very close score, 12-10. However, the "Saints" took the next four turns, 12-6, 12-8, 12-2.

Incidentally, the first go was a very close and exciting tilt throughout. Many spectacular shots were exhibited by both sides, and pinch-scoring was evidenced in many tight spots. A. Lanza and J. Alta, aces of the "Saints" staff, were the losers. They were opposed by M. Chicanti and A. Scenna, favorites of the Royal Italians.

The second set was represented by Sabatini and Accardi for the home team, and opposed by Silvi and Casarino for the Royals; the third set, Misera and Firpo, opposed by Mazzanti and Asta; the fourth set, Greco and Concel, opposed by Ligari and Pietro.

'The Valley of The Delaware'

by the thousands. In one year, 1729, 5,600 Ulstermen alone arrived. Five years later Herr von Beck noted in his "Travel Diary" that "here are some of all religions and sects, Lutherans, Reformers, Church people, Presbyterians, Quakers, Catholics, Dunkards, Mennonites, Sabbatarians, Seventh-Dayers, Separatists, Bohemians, Schwenkfelders, Tutchfelders and Well-Wishers."

Some of them scattering in separate communities, like the Dunkards who went to Nazareth, the Mennonites to Lancaster county, the Moravians to the town they called Bethlehem because it was founded on a Christmas eve, the Labadists to Bohemia Manor, moulded and shaped entire communities from that day to this. The Quakers taught peace and by the practice of peace secured the valley from invasion by the Indians. The English, following the lead of the Swedes, became enterprising traders and shipbuilders. The commerce of the Delaware grew fast in that century when the Philadelphia shippers gave it the title of the "Clyde of America." The Germans and the Welsh in their household arts and manufactures, added to its industrial as well as its artistic worth. Growing more rapidly than any city in America, for a century after its founding, Philadelphia became the metropolis of the New World and by reason of its size and its central location the capital of a new country.

In this region were realized the principles of Penn which found fruition in the Constitution of the United States. The dramatic dash of Caesar Rodney and the vote of John Morton as determining factors in the adoption of the resolution that the Colonies should be free and independent were forces from the Delaware. Here, when financial disaster threatened the newborn government, at the close of the Revolution, were Morris and Salomon ready to aid it.

Sailors and heroes were born and bred here on the river like Barry, Barron, Bainbridge, Biddle, Lawrence, Hull and Decatur. Pitch first showed on this stream how a boat could be propelled by steam. Oliver Evans showed in this city what steam could do on land. Thomas Leiper became the greatest locomotive builder of his day. The Cramps became first among the great shipyards of modern times in this country. Gastelowe, Rush and Savery showed what master workers in wood could do. Baron Stiegel made glass that all the world prizes today. The first paper mill in America was started here. The first daily newspaper was published in Philadelphia. Here was America's first medical school and its first law school and its best doctors and lawyers. There were soldiers like Biddle and Mercer and Wayne. The first American carpets and the finest American porcelain were made here.

Iron ore and the proximity of coal and an abundance of lumber gave great impetus to the early development of the valley. From the days of the Durham Furnaces at Riegelsville it became a munitions district down to the time of the Bethlehem and Midvale steel works and the duPont de Nemours powder plants. Over a century ago half the cast iron in the United States was made here. Here in time came the carpet center, the hosiery and shoe center, the great textile district of the Nation. Some industries have gone, others have come to take their place, but the water power and water courses of the Delaware and its tributaries count more now than they ever did. When the city's plea for Federal aid for the Centennial was advanced Dr. Garber says, a spokesman described Philadelphia as the industrial center of America, the first manufacturing city on the continent and second only to London in those days.

His Crown Is Menaced

By BURNLEY

GEORGE TERRY DUNLAP is facing a number of very disquieting bugaboos this week. His chances of successfully defending the National Amateur golf championship at Brookline, are extremely slim when you consider that he will be facing a very strong field of contenders in a series of 18-hole "sudden death" matches on the British Amateur style.

Unlike the regular tournament play of the open championships, the 18-hole match play of the amateur tournaments are rarely a genuine test of golfing ability. Luck plays such an overwhelming part in these short duels that champions can easily be upset by unknowns, as happened to Bobby Jones at Pebble Beach.

Dunlap is in a spot, and he will need more than his share of luck to pull through with the amateur crown still on his head.

Lawson Little is being touted as the leading contender for Dunlap's crown; and this curly-haired bomber of the links who won the famous British Amateur crown last spring will surely be a dangerous competitor at Brookline.

Little is one of the longest drivers in golf, and when on his game, he is absolutely devastating—as witness that epic round in the finals of the British Amateur when he broke all records of that ancient classic.
